Hello Scott,

I just wanted to thank you for the book you've sent to me "Conversations on Success". I received it today, but have not had an opportunity to read all of it yet. But when I opened the book this afternoon, I coincidentally opened up the book just where you begin your interview (pg. 149).

Wow. . .what an amazing life transition you bravely overcome. . . and how admirably successful you have become through it all. I must say I was very impacted by your story . . .the way you still saw the vision of opportunities for your life and your assessment of all the choices you believe were still abound you. I feel very inspired by your amazing story. You know, I'm a firm believer in visualization. . .but taking the steps to make those visions a reality is sometimes hard to do. Just the point you make in this book, fears, assessing the choices we have . . . having control of our own success,. . I guess that's a good question, Why do we let others decide how successful we can become. "challenging fears" . . .it's a lesson. . .

Scott, Thank you for sharing your story and the book with me.

I believe my life is due for a promotion!

Thank you
